The Louisiana Returning Board.

The following article from the New Orleans Picayune published some months prior to the election, and singularly, contemplating the very contingency which has now arisen, gives the best possible idea of the functions and character of this board.

Do the people of the United States really know what a Louisiana returning board is, how it is composed, and what its purpose is? Do they know that it is composed of five men, the majority of whom are vested with plenary powers to reverse the result at any ballot box throughout the State, and further, that that majority is always of the same political complexion? Do they know that it is absolutely impossible for the largest conceivable majority to carry this State peacefully without the consent of this board pledged to the triumph of its own party?

Do they know that there is no appeal from the decisions of this board, even the Court having declared itself without authority to revise its action? We believe not; we believe if they did they would rise in their might and sweep forever from the places of power a party under whose fostering care no inquiry so enormous has come into being.

But the returning Board is only the last of a series of frauds, only the culminating point of a far-reaching combination, the aim of which is to suppress the expression of the popular will. Back of the returning Board stand the officers of registration, the supervisors, his assistants and clerks. These are republicans, appointed by republicans, looking for their reward from republicans. The books are in their hands—hands, for the most part, equally ready to cut a throat or forge a name! It is no use to mince the matter.

We might as well face the situation squarely and announce it to all the world as we know it. Our enemies are about to make a systematic effort to defraud us once more out of the result of a victory which we are sure to win. They have no hope of success through other than foul means. The past has taught us of what they are capable. Their present course indicates all too plainly their intention to repeat the fraud upon which the present usurpation is founded.

The people of Louisiana have more than once already submitted to that supreme wrong which virtually deprives them of redress by ballot, the freeman's last resort, and the carpet bagger and the sealawag are perhaps warranted in the inference that they will once more deliver at the call of the highwaymen. Nevertheless, we regard the experiment as a bold one.

The question is not one in which Louisiana is alone interested. It may happen that the result of the Presidential election will turn up in the electoral vote of Louisiana. In that event will the country consent to see inaugurated a President whose elevation has been secured by frauds and oppressions unparalleled in the history of civilization?

Regarded from this point of view the subject gathers an additional interest and portends a trouble of national proportion. That the returning board is in its very nature opposed to the essential idea of a popular election is not and cannot be denied. Neither is the proposed one-sided registration at all defensible.

The Battle of Dinwiddie.

A correspondent of the London Telegram writes: "Thus they came on, and presently opened so fearful a rifle fire that the bullets fell all around us like hail. As yet our infantry were quiet; not a rifle was heard, and the foe was coming nearer to the semi-circular trenches of which I have before spoken. Suddenly there is a movement in the bushes, a sharp note from the bugle, a rattle of bayonets and steel barrels, and then a little cheer. Our men are moving, the supports are taking the empty trenches, and the rest of each battalion is in the reserve lines. All at once such a fire pours forth as envelops us in smoke, and makes that still advancing column stagger. Yet only for a minute; there is a counter-charge and a rapid rush. Whirl! how the bullets fly past them; with what shrieks do the shells burst in! See, the Serbians are standing still for a moment, firing yet, but coming no nearer to the mountain. Their line is gradually being fed, too, and they are extending every moment. It is only the fear of the shells and the bullets which makes them hesitate. Perhaps not only the fall, but rather the effect, for now they are falling fast, and without the aid even of a glass we can see that they are growing the ground by hundreds or staggering away to die. Harder than ever is our fire, as theirs weakens, and more determined, too, are our men, for they now quit the outpost trenches and are advancing upon the bewildered enemy. Volley after volley from the foe fails to stop them; they leave many a comrade on the ground, but on they go, till at length the Serbians, seeing their red coats coming nearer and nearer, turn and fly, leaving 3,000 of their number, who will never see home in Russia or on the banks of the Danube any more. * * * Not one was there but might have been the hardy father of a numerous family. I did not see a boy among them. One in particular I noticed—and he was but a young warrior, who, having fought to his uttermost and received a wound in his stomach, had lain down upon the road to Derbent in hope of succor. Unhappily for him, friends were far away, and his comrades had hung, in fantastic fashion, on a tree, hard by, a Circassian, who, having fallen into their hands, had been first tortured and put to death. I was looking at him as I rode by, wondering if he were yet alive, when, horrible to relate, there came upon the scene four Chirkissoes. They, too, had seen their hanging comrade, and they thirsted for blood. At this moment the wounded Serb raised his head and rolled his glassy eyes round in hope of desecrating help. Down sprang a Circassian, and with a little dagger pierced the dying man through and through, cut off his right hand, and ripped him up as he lay upon the ground. Fortunately his end was near, and he expired; but even in death he was a hardy man, this victim to the barbarous war which Russia has caused and waged."
